two hundred high quality images of beautiful streets and buildings destroyed by bombing or planned demolition bring to life the stories behind Britain's lost urban heritage. The destruction meted out on Britain's city center during the 20th century by the combined efforts of the Luftwaffe and brutalist city planners is legendary. Medieval churches, Tudor alleyways, Georgian terraces and Victorian theaters vanished forever to be replaced by a gruesome landscape of concrete office blocks and characterless shopping malls. Now architectural historian Gavin Stamp shows exactly what has been lost. Reproduced in this haunting volume are hundreds of city photographs showing streets and buildings that are gone forever. The accompanying text traces their creation and destruction, remembering the massive campaign to save the Euston Arch, wantonly demolished in 1962, and mourning the loss of lovely medieval Coventry, which was already doomed by the city planners even before German air raids intervened. Alternately fascinating, enraging and heartbreaking, this is an extraordinary evocation of Britain's architectural past and a much needed reminder of the importance of preserving heritage.

In the year 2012, the earth awaits a super catastrophe. Its magnetic field will turn over in one go. Phenomenal earthquakes and tidal waves will completely destroy our civilization. Europe and North America will shift thousands of kilometers northwards into polar climate. Nearly the whole Earth's population will perish in the apocalyptic happenings. These dire predictions stem from the Mayans and Egyptians, descendants of the legendary Atlantis. The Atlanteans had highly evolved astronomical knowledge and were able to exactly calculate the previous world-wide flood in 9792 BC. They built tens of thousands of mandjits and escaped to South America and Egypt. In the year 2012, Venus, Orion and several other stars will take the same code positions as in 9792 BC, the year of the previous cataclysm. For thousands of years, historical sources have told of a forgotten time capsule of ancient wisdom located in a mythical labyrinth of secret chambers filled with artefacts and documents from the previous flood. This book gives one possible location.
